Article published on August 3rd 2012 | Customer Service

If you are enthusiastic about driving cars, you may consider teaching others the best techniques about driving a vehicle. Teaching people how to drive a car is a rewarding part-time or full-time occupation for numerous driving enthusiasts. However, to become a certified driving instructor, you must attend a driving instructor training course conducted by a reputed driving training academy that will help you to pass the Advanced Driving Instructor test.

Requirements for becoming a driving instructor

To become a driving instructor, specific minimum legal requirements need to be fulfilled. Any individual at least 21 years of age with a car driving license for at least three years can become a driving instructor. Moreover, certain additional criteria need to be satisfied before obtaining a driving instructor license. A person who has earned less than six penalty points on his/her license and has not been barred from driving at any time in the past four years is considered the ideal candidate for becoming a driving instructor.

Things to learn in driving instructor training course

After joining a reputed driving instructor training academy, you will be surprised to realize that your driving skills that you have earlier boasted of are not adequate for becoming a driving instructor. There are many different areas of maneuvering a vehicle that you must learn to become an approved driving instructor. To meet the individual needs of aspiring driving instructors, a good quality driving training academy offers one to one training. The driving instructors involved in training wannabe driving instructors are highly experienced. The courses are usually flexible, tailored to meet lifestyle and learning abilities of individual learners. With intensive training, a dedicated student of a driving instructor training academy can obtain a driving instructorâ€™s license within two months. However, the exact time taken to become an approved driving training instructor depends upon the amount of time you are willing to invest in the course and availability of ADI test dates.

Approved Driving Instructor (ADI) test

After successfully completing the driving instructor training course, you must pass the ADI test to become a certified driving instructor. The ADI test is divided into three parts. The first part tests your theoretical knowledge of driving including rules and regulations of driving and driving training. It also includes a video-based hazard perception test. Your advanced driving skills are tested in the second part of the ADI test. In the third part of the test, examiners will check your instructional ability.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/customer-service-articles/driving-instructor-training-to-become-an-adi.htm - Article Side

Richard Bradshaw - About Author:
If you are looking for a professional male & female driving instructors, Learn to drive with our a Driving instructor training Birmingham provides driving lessons. Whether you are a nervous beginner or have years of experience learn all the techniques with our top rated best a Driving

Instructor course.

Article Keywords:

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!