Article published on August 3rd 2012 | Customer Service

Being a field inspector is a great way to make nice money. There simply are a lot of field inspector jobs out there. But what are the top 5 money makers for field inspectors?

1. Commercial Inspections

Insurance companies often request of various properties. Some that might fall under this category include retailers, wholesalers, restaurants, condo complexes and apartment buildings. Youâ€™ll generally be given a checklist and asked to take photos of areas, such as stairs, elevator or laundry room. Often you might just focus on the business equipment itself, such as pizza oven in a restaurant. These inspections pay $50 to $300 for a half an hour or more work.

2. Delinquency Inspections

The recent recession has meant a high number of foreclosures as people are falling behind in their home payments. A field inspector might be asked to visit the delinquent borrower and to inquire as to when they plan to make a payment. If theyâ€™re not there, the inspector often leaves a door hanger urging the homeowner to contact their lender. These can pay $10 and up, and itâ€™s really quite possible to do several in an hour. Some field inspectors do property preservation, such as boarding up broken windows and changing locks. These often pay $40 to $100.

3. Construction progress Inspections

When a lender loans money to a construction builder, it is often done in "progress" payments as the building is completed. A field inspectorâ€™s job is to make sure things are progressing as planned. They follow a checklist and take a few photos. These inspections take 10 to 20 minutes and pay $25 to $40 each.

4. Collateral Inspections

When equipment is leased, such as a backhoe or bull dozer, the company that loaned it often wants to make sure the equipment is where it should be and is being maintained. These onsite inspections take just a few minutes and can pay anywhere from $20 to $100 each.

5. Insurance Inspections

Insurance companies need an inspection at two different points. First when a new policy has been written. The inspection involves checking the condition of the property, looking for cracks in the sidewalk or damage to the stairs. These inspections take about half an hour and can pay $25 to $60. The other time and inspection is necessary is after a claim has been filed, such as after a tornado or flood. As repairs are made you might be asked to do additional follow-up reports to make sure things are progressing as they should be. These inspections can pay anywhere from $20 to $80 per report.

The top 5 money makers could help you make the profits you have always dreamed of. Itâ€™s all possible by becoming a field inspector. Try these five an you will be amazed at the profits you are making in very little time.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/customer-service-articles/top-5-money-making-tips-for-field-inspectors.htm - Article Side

Anthony - About Author:
Hello my name is Anthony Pierce. I always felt need of an organization that would results in a prepared not impromptu inspection and informative proofing for customers. a field inspection companies are in multitude, they do their work also. Most of the field inspectors confirm their assignment by easy manipulative and reasoning of general facts without detailed performance.

Article Keywords:
Commercial Inspections Services, Residential Inspections Services, Field Service Inspection Company, Field Inspection Services, Residential Home Inspection, Field Chase Inspection

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!