As everyone knows, dating can be difficult. First, it can be hard to meet new people at all; and when you do, it takes some effort to decide which of those people are â€˜date-worthyâ€™. Second, once you have identified a person youâ€™d like to get to know better, the challenge is the first date! Below are some things to look for when you are dating in NY, and what can be gleaned from a first date.

Itâ€™s important that you and your date choose an appropriate venue for a first date. If you are dating in New York City, there are literally hundreds of options, from restaurants and bars to galleries and museums. Dating in NY outside the city might be more challenging, but in New York City, it is easier to find a good spot. Itâ€™s recommended that you go to a public place on the first date, especially if you have never met the person before and you came across them on one of many dating sites. NYC has hundreds of those, too!

Once you are settled in to the date, itâ€™s time to get a first impression of your partner. Are they acting anxious or nervous? This is normal, and should be acceptable. Are they impolite? If so, that is a red flag; you donâ€™t want your date to start off by being rude.

Throughout the course of the date, there are several cues which can clue you in on what kind of person your date is. Are they asking you questions, and listening politely? Or are they talking about themselves all the time? If the former, it is a good sign; the latter, not so much. Now, if you met them before, you will already know these things; however, in many cases you will not have met them yet. The first impression you get on a first date is especially important if you came across this person through one of the dating sites. NYC has such a variety of residents that itâ€™s important you are extra mindful that your date is a quality person.

Finally, itâ€™s important that your date treat you respectfully when you part ways. They should be polite and respectful, and not expect to go back to your place. Depending on how the night went, they should either politely ask for a second date, or simply say goodbye.

Dating in New York City can be exciting, and the right person is out there for everyone. Good luck!
