Australia is known for its stable economy, growing work opportunities and thus the country offers different types of Australian working visa that encourage skilled labours from around the world to contribute to its working force. If you are visiting the country and have Australian working visa then you have numerous advantages.

Australian working visa allows its holder to take the work opportunities available in the country based on their skills and qualifications. In fact there are different types of Australian visa work that allows one to work based on their conditions also. Letâ€™s learn more about Australian working visa to have a clear picture of the advantages of this visa.

Firstly, as there are different types of Australian working visa available, therefore, both the employer and the employee can enjoy the benefits. Generally, there are seven different types of work visa available. This includes skilled independent visa, skilled sponsored visa, skilled regional sponsored visa, 457 or temporary business visa, employer nomination scheme, Australian working holiday visa, work and holiday visa.

Among these visas there are some types that are granted only after employer has sponsored the applicant. Similarly, there are visa that are granted to individual who want to work while holidaying in Australia, like Australian working holiday visas.

Australian working visa like skilled independent visa is for those applicants who have qualifications and skills that are in demand in Australia. In this type of visa applicants are also required to pass points test and no sponsorship is required. Another Australian visa work, skilled sponsored visa is for those applicants who failed to acquire the pass mark for skilled independent visa. They become eligible if sponsored by a relative living in Australia.

Skilled regional sponsored visa are for those individuals who agree to live and work in specified regional Australian area and are sponsored. As already said that there are some Australian working visa that are available only after the employer sponsors the applicant; employer nomination scheme is one such visa. Other than different conditions, the applicant must be sponsored by an Australian employer.

Australian working holiday visa is preferred by many tourists who want to meet the financial requirements of their trip to Australia. This kind of visa is generally granted to applicants who are between the age group of 18 and 30 and have no dependent children. The applicant must also be an eligible passport holder of the country who have reciprocal working holiday program with Australia. The applicant also must provide documents to show their access to adequate funds.

Other than these basic criteria, the applicant must meet health and character criteria. The health criteria for Australian working holiday visas is important if the applicant wishes to work in Australian health care industry. With Australian working holiday visa the holder has 12 months to travel to Australia from its approval date. Within this time frame one can leave or re-enter Australia. However, the time period spent outside Australia cannot be recovered. Working holiday makers can be employed as specified workers in primary sectors like plant and animal cultivation, tree farming, fishing, construction work and mining.
