There are many people that love to drive when there are good roads. For such kind of people Spain is an ideal country. Spain has a beautiful infrastructure having some of the finest roads in the whole of Europe. There are coastal highways, motorways and roads with scenic views in this country. One can enjoy driving along with having some great views of the surroundings at most places in Spain.

For fast driving there are carriageways and motorways in Spain. Normally the speed allowed on these high speed roads is 120 kilometers per hour. There are speed cameras used by the civil guards in Spain. Similarly there are radars in unidentified cars present on the main motorways which also come handy in catching those that violate the traffic regulations. The people that violate the top speeds face trouble in this regard.

There are some people that drive Lorries on the roads of Spain. They usually travel from north to south in Spain. One can also find them moving from east to west in the country. These Lorries are not liked by ordinary drivers as they sometimes cause traffic jams and there is lots of overtaking on the roads because of them.

One can hardly find any uneven surface on the roads of Spain. The reason is that the maintenance work is up to the highest standards. Whenever there is damage to any road in Spain the authorities work efficiently to fix the problem in no time. An important factor that is crucial in driving on the roads of Spain is the weather. In some areas of Spain the weather changes rapidly. It turns hot to cold and cold to hot suddenly which makes situation challenging at times for people driving long distance in the country. One can face sunny areas, snowy mountains, rains and coastal areas while driving on the roads of Spain.

There is a penalty points system of license in Spain. When people drive their vehicles negligently that makes them loose points on the driving license. Similarly when people drink and drive then that makes them loose points also. For every offense the driver loses points which make things work for the authorities. There are two kinds of zebra crossings in Spain. The drivers are bound to stop at zebra crossings with lights and when there are no pedestrians and lights the drivers are not bound to stop their vehicles.
