Mexico makes a great deal of its GDP through tourism and several foreign nationals come to see the history and culture of the capital, Mexico City. This area is renowned for its museums and historical centers, and a vibrant and throbbing nightlife. However, one other thing that the City should be known for is the many great eating houses which could be found in the variety of locations, so if you are shopping, visiting the cultural sites or planning for an evening on the town, you should be ready to get a number of restaurants in Mexico to fit your tastes.

One instance of the best restaurants in Mexico City is the Fonda El Refugio, located in Juarez Zona Rosa district. It is considered to have some of the best food in the City, taking its inspiration from the numerous national dishes that are now part of Mexican culture.

Fonda El Refugio takes a customary approach to serving the meals and if you need a real style of all that is nice about Mexican food along with a warm and friendly atmosphere that still manages to be cultured and traditional, then you should go to this restaurant.

Another place with a claim to be probably the best restaurants in Mexico City may be the Cantina La Guadalupana. This restaurant was initially founded in the 1920s and it has an antiquated feel that simply enhances its charm for tourists, significantly due to the narrow and cobbled street outside which will ruin a good pair of heels. Being a very customary restaurant, you can have your food in two different styles, either as a sit-down meal or as Botanas, free snacks served to those drinking in the bar. It ranges from thin slices of Jicama to entire pig's feet.

For those who actually need to feel the history of restaurants in Mexico, then the Hacienda de los Morales is the best spot. Located in the traditional sixteenth-century colonialistâ€™s house, the restaurant is decorated inside with stone and dark woods, giving you a sense for the Mexican history. You can enjoy a drink at the bar, that features the first Spanish chapel, and then enter into the restaurant for a romantic meal that includes meat, fish or seafood together with a variety of different choices. This location could be a popular wedding spot, so be ready to brush shoulders with the happy couple as you are waiting. As it is a traditional spot, it's a good idea to choose formal clothing for your evening out.
