If you're going to be visiting Lancaster Pennsylvania lodging is an easy thing to forget! There are a lot of fun things to plan, and activities to do, so make sure you book a place to stay before you head out on the road. There's nothing worse than realizing all the lodging in Lancaster PA, is booked after you get there, which often happens with frequented hotels, like the Lancaster Arts Hotel. This is especially common in areas that have popular attractions, like Hershey, and you'll have the most problems during summer and spring break. On a lighter note, here are a few of the best state parks to visit near Lancaster that are either free, or close to being free, so you can save on your vacation costs.

The Theodore A. Parker III Natural Area is a very pretty area to visit, especially if you like to go hiking in wooden places. The trails in this 100 acre park are very scenic, and many of them even boarder the streams that run through the area. If you have a permit to fish, you may be able to go fishing for trout assuming that you're visiting the park during the permitted fishing season. The nice part about going to this nature reserve is that you are right next to some of the best Lancaster, Pennsylvania lodging. While you're there, you may end up seeing quite the array of native wildlife, too!

Another really pretty park to visit is the famous Money Rocks Park. This one also features a very pretty landscape that's full of trees, and you'll also be able to check out one of the most talked about landmarks in Lancaster County; a ridge of boulders that are surrounded by a rich legend of treasure. Again, you will be right next to Lancaster, Pennsylvania lodging, which makes it very easy to keep your trip itinerary time and money efficient.

If you would prefer to stay closer to the city, and subsequently right next door to your chosen Lancaster, Pennsylvania lodging, then you may enjoy Central Park more than the above options. There's plenty of space to picnic, hold group functions and play with the kids, which is what makes this park such a popular attraction in Lancaster County. Additionally, by keeping your lodging in Lancaster, PA close to the activities you plan on doing for the day, you won't have to spend as much money on gas during the trip.
