Navarra Region in Spain by Genton Smith

Article published on June 15th 2012 | Destinations

This region has a great reputation to it especially because it borders Baskland, Aragon, Castile and France. The Way of Saint James also crosses through here making it an attraction for many visitors coming to witness the pilgrimage. The monuments in this region are quite extraordinary and each has a story to tell about the past. It is also a region which has beautiful towns which include Olite, Estella and Artajona which is majestically surrounded thanks to the medieval walls found here.

Other interesting towns within Navarra are Roncesvalles and Tudela. Pamplona is the capital and it is a very peaceful, pleasant and quiet city. It is most famed because of â€˜running of bullsâ€™ festival held annually in the month of July. The festival, locally referred to as Sanfermines attracts thousands of locals as well as tourists from different parts of the world. Other traditional festivals that make the region popular include Navarrese carnivals. You will find full enjoyment when you plan your holiday so that you are in the region to witness such festivities.

Navarra is a land of many faces and can be said to be divided into three parts. First there is the mountain range to the north which has beautiful and exceptional landscapes, La Riviera which is a plain area which has fertile valleys and small lagoons and La Zona Media which has very impressive canyons and landscapes. A tour through the region is definitely nothing short of fun and adventurous and it is therefore most ideal destination for people who love nature and adventure.

Some of the other features making Navarra a very interesting region in Spain include the many natural preserves that it has to its name. The reserves are a definite yes for adventure lovers as it opens chances for fun hiking, fishing and climbing. Those who love green holidays will love it here on this part of Spain. It can also be termed as a learning ground for all visitors who come to bask in the natural glory of the land.

When choosing a holiday destination in Spain, there is always an importance of making sure that you check on the kind of holiday the place is likely to offer you. Spain has lots to offer in the different region and it is always fair to make sure that you settle for a destination bound to offer you the holiday experience you are looking for.
