Numerous Choices for San Francisco Tourist Attractions by DJ Willis

Article published on February 27th 2012 | Destinations

The San Francisco Bay Area is located about 400 miles north of L . A . and is also on the West Coast of the U.S. The city of San Francisco along with the surrounding area has many tourist attractions. There is something for everyone within this beautiful part of Northern California.

The attractions are located in areas around and within the town of San Francisco. Within the city itself, there are numerous attractions to visit. Outside the city are also places to go to such as the Napa valley vineyards, Silicon Valley, and also the Sierra Nevada Mountains. No matter how long the trip to Northern California, it's difficult to foresee not having enough adventures.

There are many ways to visit Bay Area tourist attractions. One way is to reserve or rent a vehicle and drive to any or all of those places all by yourself. This may often be the quickest method of doing it. The only real possible negative aspect would be lacking an experienced tour guide for recommendations or pointing out landmarks.

A popular way to begin to see the attractions is as simple as a tour bus. Having a tour bus, all the inconveniences are left to the driver and the tour guide. You don't have to worry about directions. The tour guide will give all of the information about each tourist area. A big part of taking a vacation means not having to bother with the small things. All the tourist needs to do is to chill out and have fun.

Within the city of San Francisco and the immediate area, there are numerous San Francisco tourist attractions to check out. Many of them are globally renowned landmarks like the Golden Gate Bridge, which tourists can wander from end to end pretty easily and Alcatraz Island, the national park that was once a notorious federal prison.

There are many different neighborhoods in San Francisco to visit, and they're very distinctive from each other. Some good alternatives consist of North Beach, the Castro, and also the South of Market area. Whilst in the city, try a couple of various ethnic restaurants that cater to tastes all over the world.

The Bay Area places of interest aren't restricted to those within the city limits. It's worthwhile to set up a tour bus to go to areas that are even further away. Inside the Bay Area, some great choices include the Winchester Mystery House in San Jose, the vineyards in Napa Valley, and Monterey Bay using its world renowned aquarium.

People who will go a bit further out will want to take a look at visiting wonderful Lake Tahoe within the Sierra Nevada Mountain range which has world class skiing and gambling. Within four hours is wonderful Yosemite National Park, which is most widely known for the large rock formations known as Half Dome and El Capitan. All of these destinations are available inside a day at most, making them fascinating on a Bay Area vacation.
