The Spain Square is Worth Visiting in All Aspects by Nancy Gallen

Article published on July 4th 2012 | Destinations

The Spain square is the English name of Plaza de Espana. This square is located in the Parque de Maria Luisa in Seville, Spain. It was originally built in the year 1928 for the purpose of exposition of Ibero-America that was held in the year 1929. The people that wish to see the renaissance revival should visit this square as it is the best example of that because of its great architecture.

One of the main reasons of fame of Spain square ever since its creation is the Ibero American Exposition. It was a world fair that was held in this square in the year 1929. For that purpose it was created and lots of other developments were faced by Seville for the same reasons. There are special gardens, fountains, ponds, plantings, buildings and boulevards made in the city in that era. They are all notable even today. Even the Parque de Maria Luisa was well developed for the same reasons. It was then designed by Jean Claude Forestier.

Seville is a historic city of Spain but most of it was developed in the times of Ibero American exposition. Especially the southern end of Seville is all modern and it possesses great architecture of that era. The city is beautiful and so is its square. That is the same reason visitors to Seville love to spend times and take photographs at the Spain square when they get a chance.

The Spain Square or Plaza de Espana was actually designed by the great architect Anibal Gonzalez. It is a great building that has the tendency to show the technology and industry of Spain in events. It is perhaps the main building that has been built on the edge of Maria Luisa Park. It mainly comprises of a large half circle having a beautiful structure around it. There are beautiful bridges that reach this building. Similarly there is a huge centered fountain in this square that amuses all kinds of visitors.

The beautiful aspect of Plaza de Espana is that it has beautiful tiled walls. The provinces of Spain also are represented on the walls of Plaza de Espana by the tiled alcoves. The government buildings are located in this square these days. One of the notable amongst them is the Town Hall of Seville. Similarly there is a museum that reminds the visitors of the great event that took place in this building in 1929.
