There are Excellent Places for Winter Sports in Spain by Allen Marvin

Article published on July 10th 2012 | Destinations

Spain is famous for its sandy beaches and modern cities. There arenâ€™t many people that know Spain is as good in winter as in any other season. The best part of Spain for winter sports is the region of Sierra Nevada. The exact place is located at a distance of only two hours from Costa del Sol in Spain. In this part of Spain it snows the most and season remains perfect for winter sports for a period of more than 5 months.

A great aspect about Sierra Nevada is that there are ski slopes in this area that last for more than 60 kilometers. People that are not much into skiing can also enjoy other kinds of entertainments in this area. For example there are twelve chairlifts that are effectively working in Sierra Nevada in Spain. Similarly there are two cable cars and five ski lifts in the area for the amusement of visitors.

Usually people enjoy skiing in the day timings in Spain. However at many places the winter sports activities are also available on Saturday nights and in the holiday season. The famous slope for night skiing in Spain is El Rio which is working in this discipline since 1994. A good aspect about skiing at night is that the ski resorts are comparatively less crowded in nights and the atmosphere is very much enjoyable.

There are many people having no ideas about skiing. Such people do not head towards any winter sports destination. That is a poor way to work things out especially in case of Spain. There are many skiing schools that teach people the art of skiing in very less span of time. The visitors that know nothing about skiing can learn the basics within few hours and they can start enjoying things the way experts do.

A great aspect about the winter sports in Spain is that the country is technologically very advanced. All the latest machinery is available in Spain when it comes to snow generation or making a slope feasible for skiing. A great aspect is that Sierra Nevada in Spain is located at a distance of 30 minutes from Granada where people head for enjoying golf in the sun. This contrast in temperature is not easily available in all corners of the globe. This contrast is liked by many visitors to the place for the same reasons.
