Eating out has always been a tradition in Mexico, and there are many restaurants there which are going for several years. The simplest restaurants in Mexico are usually targeted upon the native Latin American cuisine, and foreign visitors to the country head straight for a Mexican restaurant. But, not all of the restaurants in Mexico can be easily found, and this can be certainly true for few of the top-quality places which do not use the traditional cuisines, however instead look to other locations for a 'mash-up' of various styles. Such sorts of high-end restaurant are usually overlooked by the visitor, however would not be ignored if you want a taste of modern Mexico.

One of the most costly, and the top restaurants in Mexico is the Biko, found in Mexico City. The chefs decided that traditional Mexican dishes weren't adequate for them and they turned instead to the Basque region of Spain. This area is filled with passion, particularly regarding food and if you have never tasted divine food earlier, then you should definitely put up with the high bill to get a chance. The owners bring in fantastic local product, guaranteeing that the food is fresh and then add a mixture of different flavours to actually bring out the very best in dish.

If you actually need a sample of the best Mexican cooking, then you can also find that in the capital city, with the Origenes Organicos providing you with excellent and nourishing food. This is often much of a deli than a restaurant, so bear that in mind while you are going to visit it. Most people would not realize that a few of the top restaurants in Mexico are located close to the fabulous museums and cultural history locations of the City, but just by walking around you can find a number of fascinating eateries in Mexico City.

Another place to find nice restaurants in Mexico is in Vallarta. This coastal town attracts a massive number of tourists every year, and which is mainly due to the wonderful beaches, and the good eating options.

After all, Vallarta holds a Restaurant Week within the spring, and there's also a Food Festival in November, getting visitors to a number of the top restaurants in Mexico. The only risk from eating here is that you would possibly put on a bit of weight; it's hard to neglect even one fantastic restaurant.
