With the various advancements that the world is witnessing, the trends are changing or rather upgrading every single moment. There are so many things which were a part of the so called "latest" trends in the markets and are now nowhere to be seen. VCRs have been replaced by CD players, cameras are not digitalised, phones have become "smartphones" and many such things that happened within few years.

Life is full of activities and time is limited. However, in the world of cut throat competition it is very important to keep one updated of the latest happenings around the world. The best recommended source of information for such updates is none other than the newspaper. Newspapers have become an integral part of majority of the life of people. Some could not even have a good start without reading it. It won't be wrong to consider it as a habit or addiction for many. However, it can be termed as an addiction with no wrong consequences rather it only upgrades one's knowledge and insight. However, the daily chores of people limit them to spare time for themselves and their families and in such a scenario taking sometime out of their busy schedule for reading newspaper became difficult. Moreover, newspapers are preferred to be read in the mornings and that is the time when people need to rush to work and thus they find it difficult to read the newspapers.

For all such people who find it difficult to spare time in the morning, online newspapers have proved to be a boon. With the introduction of online newspaper, people find it extremely easy to access the information as and when they want it. They don't have to worry about the local newspaper distributor to supply the newspaper on time so that they could manage to read it. By simply accessing the internet, they can log on to various sites that provide the services of online newspaper. Thus, the advent of online newspapers reduced the dependence on a third party and makes the information all the more reachable like never before. Even if one is at one's workplace, one can easily access the online newspaper on one's computer and read it in the free time.
