7 Dreadful Mistakes to Avoid in a Literature Review

by Cheryl Cooper

Article published on February 6th 2012 | Education

Literature review is an integral part of dissertation writing and so it becomes immensely important to focus more on literature review than any other part of the dissertation.

A dissertation is 9% rejected on the basis of badly written reviews, therefore, you must focus on the mistakes that are generally committed by the students out of which some are given below.

1- Failure to connect the researches with your current study:

At times, students are unable to connect the old gathered researchers with their study. This creates a very confusing impression on the supervisors. You should make sure that the research you are mentioning is relevant to the nature of study you are doing.

2- Over focus on secondary sources rather than primary ones:

Secondary sources are less reliable than the primary ones, so, you need to be more careful with that. Try to concentrate more on primary sources that are often neglected by the students.

3- Over critical about other authorâ€™s work:

Research writers often criticize the other researcherâ€™s work too much that even the right thing is claimed to be wrong. This happens because the students want to make their research superior from them but instead it creates problems for them. Therefore, make sure your are not doing such thing.

4- Failure to find out which research is important:

Do you know which research go the most attention and which one was important, which one was neglected. That is natural since you were not there and have a little know-how of the subject. The best way to deal with this problem is to conduct a research on that particular research as well to gain knowledge about them. That way, you can find out which research was important and which one wasnâ€™t.

5- The student fails to mention the data collection method:

Literature review isnâ€™t limited to mentioning the researches and critics but there are important parts as well. Students usually forget to mention the data collection methods as well. Hence, you must carefully read the guideline of writing a literature review.

6- Forgets to mention alternative findings:

There are many other alternative findings as well that are important to mention but student get failed to mention them.

7- Never ever download a literature review example from internet for free:

There are many literature review samples available to download from internet that are free as well but remember, it is useless to rely on such samples since they have been downloaded thousands of time by other students as well..

Hence, avoid the above told mistakes and write a fine literature review example quick and easy!

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/7-dreadful-mistakes-to-avoid-in-a-literature-review.htm - Article Side

Cheryl Cooper - About Author:
Cheryl Cooper has been teaching since 2001. Cheryl Cooper is currently finishing up her Phd at Wayne State. Cheryl Cooper brings youth, enthusiasm, and expertise to each of her classes. Cheryl Cooper's favorite mediums to work in are a literature review. Now she is also helping out students to complete a literature review example assignments.

Article Keywords:
literature review, literature review example

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!