Grandfather, grandmother, mother, father, uncle and aunty; all under one roof. Isnâ€™t it fun to stay with so many relatives at one home? All this is possible only when you stay in a joint family. We often think that it is almost next to impossible to bear so many people all the time, but we do not realize the positive effects of being a part of joint family.

Children who live in a joint family from their initial stage of life experience a sheltered life surrounded by their near ones. Children learn the value of sharing, being patient, and simultaneously, their lives get improved while living in a joint family. When we think of a joint family, the first thing comes in our mind is sharing work, space, finances, love and affection. The concept of joint family is still preferred by many Indians. There many reasons for this kind of preference of people but the most common reason is stability of family ties.

The framing of a childâ€™s personality is more or less depends on the family the child leads a life with. Family is known to be the most helpful social support unit that provides a safe and secure atmosphere to the children. The values and attitudes in people are shaped by their families and these values leave a lasting impression on the children. Though raising children in joint families setup has numerous benefits, but there are disadvantages as well. Parents should follow some tips to raise a child in a joint family.

Your children have the opportunity to learn interpersonal and social skills in the company of their joint family, therefore parents should make it a point to spend some more time solely with their children on a daily basis. In the midst of so many cousins and siblings children may desire for their self-identity and status in their family. Parents should be careful and not compare or put down their childâ€™s hard work in front of others because this may lead to low self-respect.

Joint families give a sense of completion but parents need to balance the time between their family and their extended family. A blend of love, social and interpersonal skills and responsibility from the extended family system, add to your own interest of discipline, support, confidence building, and positive interaction create strong bonds between the children and the family.
