When life throws you a curve ball, sometimes the first casualty is your dream. There are sob stories of students having to drop from the School of Law because life decides to intervene: an unplanned pregnancy, death in the family, and maybe the downturn in the economy has made it impossible to find extra money to continue with your studies. The technology today is making it impossible to reconnect with your aspirations without ever going back to the four corners of school.

Guilt-free law degree

In just 140 quarter units, or about four years for those who havenâ€™t taken yet a single unit in the law program, you can earn your Juries Doctor degree without suffering from the guilt of having to leave your small child at home, or your ailing mother, or dip into the family savings. You can stay in the comforts of your home provided that you have high-speed broadband Internet for online discussions. There are just so many options when you become a member of the State Bar of California. But first you must pass the â€œbaby bar,â€• which refers to the first-year law studentsâ€™ exa general bar exam or the moral character evaluation. You donâ€™t even have to be in litigation and work in education, corporation, law enforcement, and health care.

Fitting a triangle in a square peg

You have been going to a formal institution since prep-school. You may have noticed favoritism or discrimination on the appearance of students, the color of their skin or the way they dress. Some studentsâ€™ grades suffer because they are too shy to stand up even when they know the answer. These problems are avoided when you are judged by the strength of your argument in the papers you submit. Besides, you canâ€™t expect a generic teaching method to be equally effective in a class of 50, for example. An online law program has the advantage of one-on-one mentoring or lively interaction with classmates on group activities.

More options available

Some online universities offer you three options: you can attend live streaming of lectures and join the discussion through chat; record the online lectures and view them at your convenient time; or when you are near the school, drop by from time to time if you want to feel again the classroom experience. The best thing is you can leave anytime you want and watch the lecture later on. With online law program, you have full control of your future.
