Article Side

Choose a Masters Degree in Health Administration by William Hauselberg

Article published on March 6th 2012 | Education

With a growing baby-boomer population, health care technology advancements and considerable changes in health care laws and regulations, the need for health care professionals in many disciplines continues to grow. Health care administration professionals manage and oversee the services of many health care providers to ensure the business runs successfully. Employers seek health care administration professionals who obtained a masters of health administration degree. A health care administration masters degree program can provide you a career path into this personally and financially rewarding career.

How to Enroll in an Educational Program

Because of the increasing demand for educated health care professionals, many colleges and universities are offering accelerated, online and on-campus programs to fit busy professionalsâ€™ schedules. General requirements to enroll in a health care administration masters degree program requires a bachelorâ€™s degree in a discipline related to public health or life sciences. Some educational programs offer a combined MBA and health administration degree, and will consider those with a bachelorâ€™s degree in business administration or public administration. Experience working in a health care environment is also required for most of these educational programs.

Most masters of health administration degree programs are accredited by the Commission on the Accreditation of Healthcare Management Education. Coursework includes an overview of health care systems, their financial responsibilities, laws and ethics related to how health care providers practice, business administration principles specific to the health care industry, and topics such as patient care and management of health care staff.

Careers Related to Health Administration

After obtaining a masters of health administration, youâ€™re qualified to use your education in a variety of health care settings. Job titles typically include health services manager or director or medical services manager or director. These professionals work in specialty areas of health care such as nursing homes, outpatient care facilities, long-term care facilities and physicianâ€™s offices. Many work in hospital settings. As health insurance providers continue to add additional health care procedures and practices to their policies, other health practitioners such as chiropractors and different types of holistic doctors seek the services of a qualified health administration professionals to help manage their practice.

Some health administration professionals oversee and direct the services of specific health care professionals and departments. They may oversee the nursing staff, administrative staff or oversee a specific department such as radiology or cardiology. A health care administration masters degree can lead to an exciting career in a discipline of health care you enjoy.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/choose-a-masters-degree-in-health-administration.htm - Article Side

William Hauselberg - About Author:
The author has an immense knowledge on a health care administration masters degree. Know more about a masters of health administration related info in his website.

Article Keywords:
health care administration masters degree, masters of health administration

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!