Article Side

Choosing the Best Senior Year Class Schedule

by Matthew Martinez

Article published on February 18th 2012 | Education

The final year of high school is definitely an exciting and difficult time in a person's lifespan. Most students are having fun with their time together with their childhood classmates, taking SAT test prep and researching colleges and universities. For university bound students, choosing the right classes is crucial to become granted admission into preferred schools. Individuals should take courses in which they are able to prosper but aren't far too simple. Picking the best courses can start preparing individuals for higher education level classes, plus they can help give them time to look at online SAT prep.

Free SAT prep is accessible for people across the nation. Quite a few students pay plenty of cash on expensive SAT prep guides, but choosing the best options can save students money. SAT test prep often concentrates on preparing kids for certain sections of the SAT. SAT prep classes can give people practice SATs, allow them to have actual former test questions and give time saving strategies for the important test. The SAT is generally broken down into three distinct sections: writing, critical reading and mathematics. Critical reading and mathematics include the two portions that the majority of schools look at, so test takers really should concentrate on doing well in those areas.

Besides the SAT, students have to choose challenging courses for his or her senior year. There are several classes that will give college credit in high school. For instance, dual enrollment programs permit kids to enroll in a part of a class at their school and another part of that elegance at a nearby school. The course typically gives a few college credit hours to the individual upon completion. Doing well in dual enrollment classes is a sure way to spare time and money when individuals hit college.

If dual enrollment isn't a viable option, individuals may look into taking advanced placement (AP) classes. AP classes are fast-paced courses taught at a college degree of complexness that conclude with the taking of the AP examination. An AP test is scored on a scale of 1-5, and customarily, if the test taker earns a four or a five on the exam, they are allowed to be given credit for that class once attending college. Nonetheless, students really should only choose AP courses in topics where they succeed to ensure good grades and a high score for the AP test.

For those who is probably not ready for the challenge of advanced placement or dual enrollment classes, honors courses are offered. Honors classes look great on transcripts, and so they are actually twelfth grade lessons taught at a fairly faster speed than standard level classes. If individuals choose a balanced blend of honors, AP and/or dual enrollment lessons in their 12th grade year, they are able to coast over the college application process and become ready for anything that college courses may toss at you.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/choosing-the-best-senior-year-class-schedule.htm - Article Side

Matthew Martinez - About Author:
To enroll today in a a SAT Prep course or for added info on a SAT test dates check out the additional resources.

Article Keywords:
SAT Prep,SAT test dates

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!