Human beings are social beings. Responsiveness is built in, and we came to this world to respond and relate to others. Infants also turn their head when they hear the human sound. Children begin to interact with other kids apart from the family in child care or in school. They began to develop friendship with each other and these relations are different than those they have with parents and relatives. Itâ€™s true that family relationship gives us ease, closeness and sense of intimacy. However this cannot substitute for other relationship. From the beginning of our life friendship is the most important relationship as we can share our feelings with our pal without any hesitation. Making friends is the effective way to get involved in the social life. Friends are the childâ€™s entire social world, therefore just to know your child friend you should involve yourself in their social life. You can invite your childâ€™s friend at home, make them feel comfortable and it will enable you to know with whom your child is spending time.

When you get to know your childâ€™s friend, it will give you a great way to make a relationship and socially involved with your child.When you try to know the parents of your kidâ€™s friend then you will get the sound idea, from where the friends have come or what is their family background. It will also give you a happy feeling that you allow your child to go in someone elseâ€™s house whom you know properly. It is very important for the children to have other children to relate for their social development. In this fast moving world it has become compulsory to routine some time for children to get together and play. The child will also come up with some fun activities instead of playing video games or simply watching the movie inside the room. Friendships are important in assisting the children develop emotionally and socially. The children learn the give and take of social behavior. In this way they learn the peopleâ€™s different behavior and their viewpoint. Friendship is just not for the lavishness but they are the necessity for healthy psychological development. It has been proved by research that children those who have friends have a great sense of well being. They also have better self esteem, less social problems then people who donâ€™t have friends. Moreover children who have friend, they donâ€™t feel lonely or any adjusting problem in the school.

Many people come in our life and go away but only true friends will leave mark in your heart. True friendships are based on love, respect and forgiveness. Friends donâ€™t have to be exactly the same; friends have similarities but they also have their differences. Friendship does not strengthen on similarities but to accept each-others faults and help rectifying it. Friends are our treasures as it is said that a friend in need is a friend indeed; they make us laugh when we cry; they make us feel loved when we feel depressed; and give us the courage to fight with any situation, they make us feel special when we are avoided.
