Article published on December 21st 2011 | Education

If you live in Pennsylvania and are thinking of attending a four year college, PA has many colleges from which to choose. First, there are some things you need to determine prior to making a decision.

Do you have a major yet?

One of the first things to do before looking at colleges is to choose a major, or course of study. Of course, you will want to pick a major where you have the greatest chance of finding a job upon graduation from college. One very good field to research is accounting. If you want to earn an accounting degree Pennsylvania has many colleges that offer such a degree. Because of this, you may wish to narrow down your list to certain locations in Pennsylvania.

Do you know where you want to go?

If you live in the Eastern part of the state and want to earn an accounting degree Pennsylvania has many colleges that you can choose. Depending upon your budget, you may want to choose a private college, or you may want to attend another type of college.

Are you ready to choose a school?

After you have decided your major and the location of the school, you can begin to create a list of schools. After you create your list, you will want to see if the school is accredited in order to make sure it is a top notch school. Certain schools are known for outstanding programs of study in specific areas. In order to get a jump start on a great career, you will want to choose a college that is known for a great program of study.

By this time, you will have narrowed down your list to a handful of colleges. At this point, you will probably want to take a tour of the college and see what the campus is like. You may even be able to talk to other students in order to learn what you can expect if you attended college at that particular campus.

One of the last steps in choosing a college is to find out how to pay for the cost of tuition. You may want to visit the financial aid office in order to find out about financial aid packages as well as grants and loans that will be available. To complete the process, you will need to submit an application form to one of the top notch four year college PA has to offer.
