Bihar has been the major learning centre from the medieval age for it is the home of ancient universities like Nalanda and Vikramshila. Though destroyed in early 13th century, it is noticed that top ranked civil servants churns out from the places like Patna and Vashi. There are 1,574 schools in Patna of which only 21% are government aided, while rest are run by the private authorities. Patna has always attracted minks and students for the sake of knowledge.

Apart from the primary and secondary schools in Patna, there are number of play schools too that has emerged recently to impart formal education. Though there is lack of order in the zila schools, the private schools are found to be working on the norms of ICSE or CBSE board. It is also observed that the private unaided schools are better than the government schools for the reason that there is 90% attendance. Though there is lack of good infrastructural facilities, the government is trying to create the better learning environment, for it has been frequently noticed that the talent in Bihar has always overshadowed others.

Vashi is also rising in terms of education. Steps are being taken by the government to enhance the education system of Vashi. The recent news declares that government is going to provide free uniforms to the school students from first to eight classes. The schools in Vashi are also stressing upon the girl child education. Education in Vashi is the major issue of discussion in the government and education ministry. Also, there are many good schools in Vashi that try to uphold the standards of the child. Computer education is also gaining importance in Vashi for increase in the technology every day.

If we look towards Pune the education structure is just the opposite. Considered to be the eighth largest metropolis city of India and second largest city in Maharashtra, Pune is known for the education facilities and prosperity. The large number of student population is found here and there are large numbers of quality institutes. The basic learning schools are run by Pune Municipal Corporation, usually affiliate to ICSE or CBSE board. It is the largest centre for foreign language course in India.

The private schools in Pune are preferred by most of the residents of Pune because of better facilities, use of English as a medium and modernized infrastructure. The schools target co-education just to create an all round development in the child and mould their philosophy and mindset. This type of disciplinary and progressive changes in the child behavior provides a lot of satisfaction to the parents. The city of Pune is also known as the oxford of India for many international schools situated here.
