Education in Kerala has been endorsed during British rule in India by Catholic and Christian missionaries who were keen on providing education to all sections of society and strengthening of women, without any kind of discrimination. The contributions of Catholic priests and nuns are very important that have played the major role in educating women and people belonging to lower scale of society who are undergoing many social hurdles in their life. Their work resulted in promoting education for girls and is commendable for establishing many good schools in Kerala. After independence Keralaâ€™s high literacy rate is also attributed to girl literacy at high rate. It is also said that when a woman is educated she will make sure that her children are well educated.
