

Article Side

Get the Best Literature Review Help on Finding and Sorting Information by Donna Santos

Article published on January 10th 2012 | Education

Many students confuse the concept of doing critical analysis, and do not know how to do a literature review. It is basically an explanatory writing on a topic of your interest, and it does not require you to conduct a fresh research. Rather you have to discuss the researches that have already been made on the topic.

The main purpose of this chapter is to bring the student up to date of any new advancement in the field related to the topic. In this way, the student reads, or attempts to read, every available research related to the field. Thus new doors of research are opened for him.

The most important thing that really matters in this type of writing is the comprehensive style of writing and the use of terminologies.

Now let us discuss the process of going through the collection:

1. To begin with, first you have to find as much information on the topic as you can. Finding relevant information on the topic is most tiring task. But internet has made it a lot easier to find innumerable references and previous researches on the subject. Other sources can be libraries and databases, plus newspapers, government documents, bibliographies, relevant text books, journal articles, etcetera.

I would like to share a tip with you in this text. As you are looking for information and going through references, I would highly recommend that you make notes of all the details of the sources of the information. This will save a lot of quality time at the end of the dissertation when you will begin writing your bibliographies. This will make your work easier and more organized.

2. Now that you have all the information you need, go through every word of every article very intently so that you can get a glimpse of every minor and major detail and include the information in your analytical writing. You must be able to differentiate between the optimistic and pessimistic approach of the writer, and make notes of any new detail that you think can become a very essential part of your writing.

If you really want to literature review help in this process of selecting relevant articles for reference, try answering these questions:

Is the context covering singular or plural issues?

In which particular direction is the article leading to?

What is notional approach of the research?

What kind of terminologies has been used in the contextual writing?

Is the argument being supported by relevant and reliable facts and evidences?

How did the writer reach to the conclusion after the argument, and is it relating to the discussion?

Which methods of investigation are employed in the context?

Some articles can be exemplary. You can follow their style of writing and representing the ideas, which carries a great deal of importance in research writing.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/education-articles/get-the-best-literature-review-help-on-finding-and-sorting-information.htm> - Article Side

Donna Santos - About Author:

Donna Santos is a senior research writer and provides help for a how to do a literature review and a literature review help. Feel free to contact for any sort of help in this regard.

Article Keywords:

how to do a literature review, literature review help

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!