Article published on April 25th 2012 | Education

A Gurukul is a type of school in India since the ancient times, residential in nature, with shishyas living in proximity to the guru, often within the same house. In a Gurukul, shishyas reside together as equals, irrespective of their social standards, learn from the guru and help him in his day-to-day life, including the carrying out of mundane chores such as washing clothes, cooking, cleaning etc.

While living in a Gurukul the students had to be away from his house and family just like todayâ€™s residential schools. The guru-shishya tradition is a hallowed one in the Indian culture and even today some schools follow this culture to impart quality education to budding future of India. These residential schools create equilibrium by adopting the ancient technique of Gurukul education, but with a scientific edge.

By doing this these schools not only produce a citizen who is abreast with the changing times, and yet rooted in their value system. They create modern student yet with a touch of culture. Parents send their children to boarding or residential schools to make their kids strong in mind and heart. They want their kids to stand out in society and be number one. Thatâ€™s why they choose school with good surrounding environment, calm and soothing ambience for their complete mind and body development.

The Indian Public School established in the year 2001 located at Mrityunjaydham, Dehradun is such school that not only follows Gurukul system but is also modern in nature. The school endeavors to make a difference to your child's life.
