Indian society is covered with values. Values in Indians are reflected through their lifestyle. For them the most important thing of all is values. In fact, many people in India judge others with their values. It is not something hereditary, but we learn it seeing our parents and elders. Sometimes, teaching values to the kids also become required. Therefore, here are some tips to teach values to your kids:

1. Since every kid loves to hear stories of their parentsâ€™ childhood. So, try to tell them stories that are related to values. Stories of life are effective for your kids especially at bed time. It also helps you to make them fall asleep with the stories twirling inside and around them.

2. Kids are good in imitating others, especially their elders. They learn what they see at home. They are very expert at observing the match between what you do and what you say. They also easily find it out if they find any kind of dissimilarity in it. Therefore, do not give them any sort of signals that may confuse them and try to follow all your values every moment.

3. It is quite necessary to make your kids know that they are not alone. Guide your kids towards the spiritual beliefs so as to strengthen their values and give the parents a framework for their life.

4. Apart from family, kids also spend their time with their teachers, friends and coaches, and from every person they more or less learn something. So, you should also keep in contact with everybody they talk to in their daily life, so as to know the values and beliefs of those people.

5. In light family conversations, try to use dialogues that involve values in it. Try not to use the parental tone often as it creates a sense of disinterest in the children.

6. While watching Television, guide your children what to watch and what not to watch. Also try to fix a specific time when kids can watch Television and accompany them while watching it.
