It sounds funny but it is a truth that colors also add colors to peoplesâ€™ lives. You can find the difference when we enter a room which has no color and then another one which is painted with colors such as pink, red, green, etc. In the same way a colorful classroom also attracts the children as well as the teachers. They also find interest to teach and learn. Especially when it comes to children, most of them are fond of colors.

The way the classrooms are being set up have great result on many things such as how children cooperate with each other, how teacher and children interact with each other and how other school employees coordinate with each other. The physical environment and insufficient facilities are like obstructions in the process of providing high quality education.The difference can be seen as in a badly designed classroom; teachers get frustrated as they spend most of their time with children to solve their problems. Inadequate facilities make teachers play the role of magicians, entertainers and disciplinarians but donâ€™t allow them to act as educators.

To avoid such circumstances it is better to decorate the classroom to support the high quality education. Psychologists also suggest that children should be kept in a colorful environment which also means in colorful rooms. According to the experience of many teachers and program directors, good facilities and enough space inspire best child development. Poorly decorated facilities affect the quality of education, as students fail to concentrate in their studies. A properly planned classroom make them focused, give kids a sense of control, support study, and also reduces the difficult behavior. Poorly designed classroom just do the opposite and make the teachers and students to be less interested in the classroom.

In well designed classrooms, kids get the opportunity to be active and keep themselves refreshed. It also helps teachers to experience more proper interactions with the kids. We often see children not willing to go to schools. It happens because they donâ€™t get any interest in the classroom. A classroom decorated with pictures of cartoon characters and for higher classes, quotations of many famous personalities may motivate them to go to schools. A school does not provide education to its students, apart from that it is the duty of the school only to build up a positive attitude in children.
