For the modern enterprise, time wasted due to data loss and inconsistencies is unacceptable, particularly when this can often be remedied easily through the use of a data warehouse. This is the point where data warehouses come into play. Although many companies are relying on data warehouses, they are still struggling to achieve positive results due to fragmented and inconsistent data. For them SAPâ€™s Business Intelligence (BI) provides a complete information factory solution. BI is the central component in the SAP suite of applications with an added advantage of being a software package that can be used in both SAP and non-SAP environments.

SAP Business Information Warehouse (SAP BI) is the name of the Business Intelligence, analytical, reporting and Data Warehousing (DW) solution which is one of the major enterprise software applications produced by SAP AG. It was originally named SAP BIW, (Business Information Warehouse), but is now known as "SAP Net Weaver BI".

SAP introduced Business Intelligence Systems (BI) in the first half of 1997. This system approach consolidates the external and the internal sources of data into a single repository and provides preconfigured data that aids the organizations and enterprises in dealing with the data management and archiving. The SAP environment therefore expanded its horizon with the introduction and implementation of SAP BI to encompass new applications for the SAP R/3 administrators responsible for administering and maintenance of these data reserves.

Based on its important learning sap bi is compulsory for the person who wants u prove himself a best SAP BIer. For this join in an institute big process and also time, money consuming process. If we miss a class we lost a lot of subject also.
