You do whatever you feel like. You visit your parents when you miss them. Have you thought what your children do when they miss you? Do you realize your slight uncaring attitude may hurt your children and make them feel left alone? Well, children are highly sensitive. They may not tell you every time they get hurt or if they find any of your behavior weird. Your children are your responsibility. It is your duty to understand their every move.

Every day when you come back from work, ask your children about their entire dayâ€™s activity. Since children are attention seekers, they find it pleasant when their parents ask them about every now and where. Though, teachers do their part by giving the children homework in schools and also check whether they have done it or not, but parents also should show their concern in their kidsâ€™ homework. This gives the toddlers a feeling that their parents are concerned about them. Many of the children find difficulty in understanding everything that are been taught in schools. They become clear about the concept when their parents make the understand it. The reason is that they find their parents much closer than anybody else and learn and grab anything easily that their parents teach them.

During the holidays, take your children to any amusement park. They enjoy any situation better and feel secured when they are with their parents. Do not miss a chance when it is your childrensâ€™ summer vacation. Take them to some distant places. This helps in two ways, one is they enjoy with their family and it makes the family bonding much stronger, and the second is they get to see the place and get familiar with a different culture of that place. It helps them to gather knowledge about different places.

Apart from these, you can help to be with your kids in another way also. While doing any work, be it a household chore, ask your children to accompany you in the work. This way they learn some of the household work and also get the presence of their parents.

By being with your children, you help them to gather confidence. For children, their parents are their strength. Your presence can make your child win the toughest battle, and your absence can do just the vice-versa.
