The Benefits of a Two-Year Degree in Chicago by William Hauselberg

Article published on April 4th 2012 | Education

Chicago is a city with a rapidly growing business community. For students getting ready to finish high school or for individuals who are already in the work force but considering going back to school, a two-year degree can open a number of doors and opportunities for success in the city, and there are a number of benefits of a two-year program versus a four-year program.

Time and Financial Benefits

The most obvious benefits of a two-year degree program are the savings you will see in both time and money. Colleges in Chicago that offer two-year programs allow you to finish your schooling faster, therefore entering the job market sooner than students in a four-year program. Two-year programs give you a head start on your career so you can start earning money and working toward reaching your career goals. And because you are attending school for just two years as opposed to four years, the savings you will see in your wallet are significant. In fact, it is estimated that overall, two-year degrees cost roughly one-third as much as four-year degrees. So not only will you be able to start your career sooner, but you will do so with far less debt than you would if you had completed a four-year program.

In no way does a two-year degree mean a less valuable education. In fact, many people would argue that itâ€™s quite the opposite. Two-year degree programs at community colleges in Chicago offer a much more focused schedule, allowing you to skip out on a lot of the fluff of general education and electives and only take courses that are relevant to your choice of career. Youâ€™ll even find that you will save time during the application process, and the requirements for a two-year degree are less rigorous than those of a four-year degree.

Option to Continue

And should you decide to pursue a Bachelorâ€™s degree in the future, most â€“ if not all â€“ of the credits earned with your two-year degree are transferrable toward your Bachelorâ€™s. Furthermore, the skills and education you will have acquired with your two year degree will allow you to make a more informed decision when choosing a Bachelorâ€™s degree program and course of study.

For students concerned about scheduling courses and balancing work, school, and home commitments, two year programs at colleges in Chicago offers the flexibility of part-time, day and evening classes so your class schedule can fit into your life and not the other way around.

A two-year degree will put you on the fast track to success. Choose an accredited college in Chicago with over 100 years of providing education and focused, specialized training to career-oriented individuals.
