As you are heading towards the end of your academics, you will be facing the challenge of writing a university dissertation. This task has great importance in the academic life of a Masters student, as this will help him/her in molding the career.

Topics are usually derived from academic or realistic issues which may have taken birth from your studies, your work or from other fields of your personal interest.

An appropriate topic is one in which:

There is an accessible “literature review”™ on which you can construct your writing.

You can devise a problem from which you can illustrate objectives with realizable outcomes.

You can put forward a methodology for the research or learning.

You can draw finales of interest to others with an associated research question or issue.

The writing of an extended essay gives you the opportunity to:

Choose from a given field of activity a subject or problem that you need to explain and devise solutions.

Choose and investigate the essential areas of learning to facilitate your understanding of the academic background of your topic.

Exhibit self-direction and creativity in handling and solving problems.

Incorporate knowledge and skills from a variety of sources into a rational whole, making proper concepts

Significantly assess proposed resolutions using suitable verified procedures and tools.

Make critical and vital estimations on your own writing

Express your work effectively.

Upon conclusion of your essay you should have:

Highly developed your own familiarity with the topic and understanding through self-governing study.

Established a methodical understanding and a critical consciousness of current problems in your field of investigation or area of specialized practice.

Demonstrated your capacity to select and put into practice suitable research procedures and techniques.

Demonstrated self direction and uniqueness in developing analytical and investigative skills and applying them. independently to specialized level or corresponding tasks/projects/functions.

Evaluated the strong and weak points of a particular equipment or a resolution within a computing organization and critically evaluated projected solutions using appropriate techniques.

Dealt with complicated issues both methodically and ingeniously, making informed judgments in the deficiency of complete information.

Incorporated knowledge and abilities from a range of resources into a rational whole, making the correct abstractions and synthesizing opinions from fundamental grounds to produce overarching conclusions.

Evidently communicated facts, thoughts, and conclusions about estimating methods both in detail in the essay and at a high level of generalization for a broad-spectrum of readers in the placard presentation.

Therefore, you should take the university dissertations very seriously and put your full efforts in constructing such a piece of writing that engages the reader till the end.
