The Importance of Work Experience by Todd

Article published on March 16th 2012 | Education

While education plays a significant role in the professional and personal development of an individual, the other most important aspect that cannot be taken for granted is a person's work experience. The importance of academic degrees apart, an individual cannot grow and succeed in a particular area of endeavor if they lack work experience or only rely on a higher education to get upward social mobility.

The Internet is awash with educational institutes that provide quality education and have also either collaborated or have connections with reputed employers and organizations. MUST University is one of the leading online institutes that have international affiliations with the top institutions and even offer experience-based degrees to professionals and working adults.

The question that immediately comes to mind is: why is experience so important? Well, this is very important as it helps you to find an equally good, if not better, job once you quit your current employment. Besides, an experienced man is worth a hundred new, inexperienced people as he's the one who knows the inside out of the job at hand and is adept at tackling even the knottiest and most challenging situations.

If you have only have education to your name and no experience of actually being outside in the working world, then you will be underprepared in many ways for some of the challenges that you face. You won't for instance have learned to meet as many deadlines. Of course going to a university such as MUST university involves deadlines in the form of coursework and exams, but this is very different from having daily deadlines and targets. The kind of pressure that you are under when you work in these conditions is highly different to the kind of pressure that you are likely to encounter at a university â€“ having work experience prepares you for this and communicates to employers that you are able to cope.

On top of that, you will also find that getting experience in a work setting helps to hone many of your other skills. It will, for instance, teach you how to work as a member of a team, how to cope when a colleague doesn't agree with your point of view, or when your manager is making requests that you aren't able to meet. This kind of experience ensures that you will fit into the existing team an employer has and this is highly important as far as productivity is concerned.

Perhaps most importantly, getting work experience from an institution such as MUST university, will give you confidence to know that you are able to exist and operate in a work environment. It will give you a more professional tone and attitude that will help you to answer the phones with assurance, and to attend interviews thinking 'I know I can do this'. This is quite simply invaluable.

MUST University is perhaps the only online institute that gives you the opportunity to pursue your career field based on your acquired experience through trainings, workshops or any non-traditional means.
