Education system in India is looking at revolutionary changes these days. People are no more satisfied with reading the undergraduate degree and post graduate degree courses. They are looking at obtaining more number of qualifications by going for Vocational courses so that it can help them in their jobs which they get by the virtue of their graduate or post graduate degrees. These degrees are helpful in finding jobs with different organisations in full time capacity.

But the part time courses are being done nowadays so that people can have an extra edge in their full time jobs. They can add to their credits and also contribute towards the companyâ€™s benefit, which has engaged them due to their full time degrees. This advantage of the short term courses or other such courses has increased their popularity among the general public.

Apart from being extra qualifications, these courses also help people with possibilities of earning something extra, over and above their normal pay scales. This is a huge alluring factor for the popularity of such courses. Also, people with the Vocational courses are more adept in their jobs. They can do their work with greater efficiency and add a stroke of better performance which is beneficial for their employers also.

Another very important factor in the popularity of short term courses is the quick time in which these courses are over. They are usually of periods like 2 months or 3 months or less than 6 months. People can find out time from their regular jobs for such short periods, complete their courses and again go back to their jobs with a greater knowledge and experience. Their proficiency is further increased which is preferred by the companies also due to which they are allowing their employees for pursuing short term or part time courses.

A big factor in the popularity of such courses is the variety that is present and the number of topics on which such courses can be pursued. The Vocational courses are of many types and many of them are designed in such a manner that it can help people in doing their jobs with a greater proficiency. People can go for the courses in subjects such as beauty treatments, astrology, hair dressing, yoga, cosmetology, English writing and conversation, vaastu, paramedical esthetics, music, etc. These Vocational courses have been designed in such a manner that they can be either pursued by being in jobs or practice or can be taken up for a short period of time by taking a break from the regular jobs.

Short term courses can be found in networking, telecommunication, designing, animation, digital painting, share market, and many more. These courses are meant to furnish the existing knowledge and can be a value addition to the existing knowledge of the people. Part time courses are also quite popular as people can pursue these courses without having to leave or take a break from their regular jobs. Certificate course in financial planning, certificate course in clinical nutrition, public relations management, materials management, computer applications, etc are some of the common topics in which people are showing their interest.

Even complete diploma or degree courses are possible to be pursued as part time courses as the students are required to attend classes on weekends only. These kinds of courses have allowed the students to add value to their degrees which not only yields better returns in form of salaries but also gives a sense of respect and worth to their existing positions.
