Bringing Indian Culture Together with Indian Talent Shows by Danish Khan

Article published on March 29th 2012 | Entertainment

India as a country is known worldwide for its rich culture and strong history. Our heritage has been well exhibited through various forms of art such as music and dance. We as a country have been able to effectively blend popular global trends in music and dance with our abundant culture to create something magnificent and mindboggling.

Up until the recent times, the only way our country opted to showcase our wonderful music and dance to the world was through the silver screen. Today, in addition to Bollywood, television has come to play a crucial role in bringing together varied forms of art and dance from all parts of the country and also provided the great India talent a platform to exhibit this art to the world in the form of reality television and talent shows.

A True Indian Artist

A true Indian artist possesses an inborn quality to excel at any form art. Through reality television, artists from across the country are able to showcase to the world a pre-existing discipline and make effective use of this talent to engage the attention of the world.

It is a challenge for anyone to reach out to a global audience with their dance, voice or any other talent and keep them captivated episode after episode.

Showcasing the Indian Culture

Our nation takes pride in its rich heritage and folk culture which consists of rich and varied music and dance forms across different states. Reality shows which present great Indiaâ€™s talented people, bring together people that also belong to the little villages of the country who have unique talents that are being passed on within their family for generations. Reaching out to these people and presenting them to the world would certainly not have been an easy feat before the emergence of reality television.

Giving Life to Dying Art Forms

With busier lifestyles and other priorities, it has become more and more difficult for Indianâ€™s to learn the value of the rich tradition and heritage that we belong to. The emergence of such shows have resulted in bringing back to life the dying value of art and encouraging every citizen appreciate being Indian.

To be able to expose yourself with the type of talent that is out there proves to be a very enriching and uplifting experience. Talent shows have facilitated the shift of television viewing habits from mundane family sagas to something much more positive and emotionally stimulating.

Encouraging Creativity

Not only does the great Indiaâ€™s talent get showcased to the country and people around the world, it is shows like this that have encouraged creativity among people in small villages, families in tier two cities and even educational institutions.

Giving a new life to Indian art forms through television has resulted in the growth of art education and appreciations. Furthermore, a large pool of talent has emerged because of self-discoveries and motivation to pursue the unconventional. With ever growing opportunities for artisans from around the country, it is fathomable that everyone wants to take a chance at showcasing their talents. All Indian cultures have now been able to come together on a single platform and even put themselves on the global map.
