Having a wireless surround sound headphone is one of the best ways to ensure that you maintain privacy for yourself and at the same time respect others need for privacy and peace. The other reason to buy a wireless headphone is to free you from being disturbed by external noise interference. Have you not desired for a wireless headphone, especially if you have to continue with your home chores, while you also feel like listening to your favorite music. Chances are you would have while watching Verizon FiOS TV.

There are many wireless headphones to choose from, but there can be none like Wireless Surround System Headphone when it comes to comfort, performance, durability and convenience. It has unbeatable features that will enthrall you and find useful. It also uses artificial intelligence to control and gain access to features. Foremost in its utility is the ability for you to move from room to room within your household and into your garden or backyard if you have one. Wireless Surround Systems uses the very same principle used in cordless phone that are so very common today.

Some of the special features of Wireless Surround Headphones are:

1. Wireless Surround Headphone is extremely easy to setup. The tripod like shaped unit does most of the work; it acts as the transmitter, a storage rack and the charging point too. Inside are two AAA nickel metal hydride batteries that provide electrical energy for the base station. This unit can be plugged into an AC socket for recharging the unit.
2. Wireless Surround Headphones is very thrifty on energy consumption, so you can use them for long stretches of time without the need to recharge the batteries very often. Just recharge the unit overnight and you get uninterrupted services for 2 days, presuming you will use them for 8 or more hours daily.
3. The headphone, the part you wear on head is ergonomically designed for maximum comfort. The ear cups are large enough to accommodate even the largest of ears with soft padding that are resistant to sweat and fluids. That assures you that you don't have to frequently do the cleaning. Have a trial at the store where you plan to buy your headphone. Some stores will even let you hire one before you actually buy them.
4. Most wireless headphones have an easy to use volume control located very conveniently and close to the tuning button, so you can do both the operation even in total darkness. You just have to run your fingers to locate them one after the other. Most users find this as one of the features they love most about Wireless Surround Headphones. Music, remember, is most often enjoyed while you are almost asleep and this is the feature you should look for most in your new purchase.
5. Check if the Wireless Surround Headphones you plan to buy uses the 900 Mhz. RF design to give clear reception even when the user is at a long distance from the base station. This range ability is seldom available in any other comparable non-wireless headphone you can buy in the market. Besides non-wireless headphones are out of fashion anyways.
6. Most wireless headphone systems are capable of being coupled to several output sources like TV, radio etc. It has a special cable that will fit most of the music playing system. But the important thing to do is check if it is compatible with other music equipment in your home.

7. See if the Wireless Surround Headphones you plan to buy has at least two year warranty for manufacturing defects minimum; the more the better. Warranties are important, and the 2-year period that most manufacturers give is a sign of confidence that the manufacturers have on their product.
