

Article Side

Black Relationships “We Don’t Need to Make It Complicated” by James Blee

Article published on June 6th 2012 | Environment

It is not about class, race, or age, but relationships run solely on trust and respect. An African American relationship may not be easy. It can be quite complicated and may well lead to several negative consequences. Leave trust aside, but problems occur mainly through internal ego and lack of communication. When two people try to create a new relationship, then love, respect and trust should be there in full amount. A little bit of scarcity in any of these factors will lead to several difficulties in the relationship.

In case of a love-based relationship where one of the member involved is from the different race or ethnicity, there is bound to happen some negative impacts. Outside influence, ego, and pride are three important factors that hamper the relationship and stop it from developing positively. Actually, it’s the mindset of our society that is mainly responsible in creating such adverse results against interracial black relationship.

Whether in the case of black love or an interracial relationship the fundamentals should be the same. Love, respect, trust, and communication will ensure that a relationship will flourish. Although it may not always seem easy, what relationship is, there has to be give and take from both partners. If this is not the case, the relationship may have not ever stood a chance.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/environment-articles/black-relationships-we-don-t-need-to-make-it-complicated.htm> - Article Side

James Blee - About Author:

For more information on a black relationships, check out the info available online at <http://www.ebony.com/love-sex>

Article Keywords:

black relationships, african american relationship, black love

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!