Cardboard coffins may sound like odd products to you but in reality they are popular with those people who are passionate about protecting the environment. Indeed eco coffins are becoming more and more popular as environmental issues increasingly dominate the newspaper headlines. In other words just like other eco solutions cardboard coffins have been used more as the awareness of ecological concerns grows in this country and further afield. With that in mind here is an introduction to coffins made of cardboard:

The key to cardboard coffins is their biodegradability. Many traditional coffins are made from materials which take as much as hundreds of years to totally degrade and therefore have a lasting impact on the environment. Their cardboard counterparts are specifically designed to break down naturally. Therefore people go for cardboard coffins as they are 100 per cent biodegradable and therefore fit the bill if you are an eco-minded person.

There is certainly a surfeit of choice when it comes to cardboard coffins. Designs range from understated traditional-looking models to colourful and patterned alternatives for those of you who want something a little different. You may be worried that cardboard coffins are flimsy but the fact of the matter is that now high quality cardboard can be strong as well as light in weight. Indeed some makes are robust enough to carry someone of up to 23 stone. Eco coffins are therefore available which tick all the boxes for meeting your requirements: sturdy, environmentally-friendly and easy on the eye.

Where can I find a firm that makes a range of cardboard coffins?

Cardboard coffins are niche products and are therefore best sourced from specialist companies. You need to make the effort to find a manufacturer which is well known for providing high quality eco coffins. One company which you cannot go wrong with can be found by paying a visit to Greenfieldcreationscoffins.co.uk. If you buy one of their excellent cardboard coffins you will be able to maintain your commitment to preserving the environment after you are gone so why not check out the website if you need any more information?
