Gone are the days when the profession of a makeup artist was looked down upon. The beauty industry has grown rapidly and with this, the makeup artist career has become very popular and demanding. Today, a makeup artist can earn a very good living. The salary of a successful makeup artist can be at par with a marketing manager or a lawyer.

How Can You Become A Makeup Artist?

You cannot become a make-up artist overnight. A lot of time, effort and opportunities are required to develop the skills that a makeup artist requires. To become a makeup artist, you are not required to go to school. To practice the art, you do not need a license in most states. However, if you get enrolled in a makeup school you will get an edge over other makeup artists. You will be able to gain the basic skills and techniques of this art. There are various makeup courses available in these schools. Bridal makeup, special occasion makeup, special effects makeup and media makeup are examples of such makeup courses. If you want to specialize in a particular kind of makeup, you can choose only that makeup course or you can undertake all the courses and be a general makeup artist.

You can complete cosmetology courses which will provide you with a cosmetology license. With this license, you can practice this art in beauty salons. During your service in a beauty salon, you can also learn many beauty services like hair nail and skin care.

You can also take up a sales job at a makeup counter in order to gain valuable experience. Try to take up a job in a company that not only focuses on sales but also trains its employees in makeup application. This will also help you to learn new trends and new products in the beauty industry.

To polish your skills, become an assistant to a top makeup artist. In this way, you can slowly and gradually work your way to the top.

To keep yourself updated on new techniques of makeup, you can read fashion magazines or style books. You can also watch videos of professional artists giving tutorials on makeup techniques and applications.

The techniques learnt in school, makeup companies, beauty salons and through professional artists can be practiced on friends and family. Practice the art whenever you get an opportunity to do so. You might have to work for free but it would be your first steps towards being a successful makeup artist.

Build your own network. This is very important in this business. If you do not have clients, you cannot become a successful makeup artist. So, meet new people and create your own network.

Responsibilities of a Makeup Artist

After becoming a makeup artist, you are considered as a service provider. There are many responsibilities that you need to fulfill as a makeup artist. A Make Up School In London or in Canada or in any other part of the world teaches you not only the art of makeup but also explains you the responsibilities that come with this profession. You have to reach your workplace fifteen minutes before the scheduled time.

Wear clean and professional clothes to your workplace. If you have tattoos on your body, hide them. It is not necessary that all your clients will like you with tattoos and hippy clothes. So, change your appearance according to your client. Another important thing to remember is speak when you are spoken to. Do not speak just anything and on any topic. Your client might not like it. Do not allow yourself to be exploited at the hands of other people. Your job is to do makeup and not cut hair or put in contact lenses. Know your rights and stand for your rights.

The life of a makeup artist is not easy. It is very exhaustive and you have to always be on your toes. If you are comfortable in travelling all the year round, then this profession is just right for you. If you love excitement and glamour, then go on and take up this profession without thinking twice about it.
