Taking advantage of inventory financing by Mathias Scott

Article published on June 14th 2012 | Finance

What every new business needs is the ability to have a constant flow of inventory to get their business going. Considering the kind of economies prevalent right now, getting financing from monetary organization can be really difficult. Moreover it takes a great deal of time to get the money leading to a deficit of inventory. An alternative means of financing can help a great deal in such situations

Getting yourself an unsecured loan or a merchant loan will help you get some quick cash in order to release our inventory. You could first try breaking into your own finances or borrowing the money from some friends and relatives if you are sure of being able to return it quickly and without a delay. If you are unsure then getting a merchant loan would be a better bet. The only consideration is you have an inventory that is tangible. Knowledge based companies will not be able to avail of such financing.

An advantage with a merchant loan is that you do not need to have a great credit history. Usually the financier will look to see if you have a stable enough business. Interest rates and repayment periods are pre-determined and you will be able to adjust it as to your convenience. Repayment periods can go up to a year. With such loans, if you repay your installments on a regular basis for a certain amount of time, you can even become eligible for an enhancement on your loan. There are times when you may find it difficult to make a repayment. Discussing it with your financier can help as they will make some adjustments to ensure that it doesn't cause your credit history any damage.

You can easily find a financier online. The best would be to go on the basis of a recommendation from someone who has used similar services for their business. The details that you are required to give are usually the basic and can be completed in a short time. You can get an approval within two working days and have the money in your account in a week's time. This is much faster than you can expect with a financial institution. A benefit you can look forward to is being able to use the money any way you please. If you have some amount left over after getting yourself the inventory you need, then you can use the money for other purposes as well.
