It was indeed a shock to me to find out that I was diagnosed of rheumatoid arthritis. It is a condition characterized when the immune system attacks the joints and the bone. Severe excruciating pain takes over and one becomes totally bed ridden.

For an extremely active and full-of-life person like me, having to only move around restrictively was nothing less than a punishment. I was going into depression. I could not go out to meet friends, going to work was out of question. I was not even able to carry out my day-to activities without help from my family members. My life was a mess and I wanted to just end this ordeal. Until now, I was ignoring the pain thinking it would go, but slowly and steadily, the pain took over me, making me completely immobile.

It was then that I decided to see the doctor. After much difficulty, I reached the clinic and underwent all the suggested tests. When the reports came, it seemed like the end of the world to me. I had rheumatoid arthritis and there was no way but to love with the pain.

I had almost given up and then some enlightenment struck. A very dear friend told me about total knee replacement surgery India and how it had changed the way he was leading his life after arthritis. Hearing him talk about the knee replacement surgery in Delhi with so much confidence, I decided to give it a shot. But I wanted to be double sure, so I first went online to check something on total knee replacement surgery in India and hip replacement in India. A list of search options popped up on my screen and I went through each and every article and testimonial written by various patients.

I was elated to see that people who were double my age and had a much intense arthritic condition were also cured by total knee replacement surgery in India.Hip replacement India was also another option that to be explored.

So here I am, packing my bags to visit India, the wonderland of arthritic treatment.
