Ancient Rituals of Wedding Cakes Still Going Strong

by Duane Hope

Article published on August 16th 2012 | Food

Nowadays, no wedding is complete without a wedding cake and all the hoopla that goes with it, like cutting it and feeding slices of it to the bride and groom. In ancient times, the groom would then eat a slice of the wedding cake before shredding the cake over the head of his newly married wife. This practice originated from days when breaking bread over the head of the bride was said to bring long life, many children, and a sign of prosperity.

White Wedding Cakes Signifies Purity

Today, wedding cakes in London are available from many patisseries and specialty shops that cater exclusively for weddings, christenings, anniversaries, birthdays, and other special occasions. By tradition, wedding cakes are usually white in colour, again derived from ancient customs, which associated white with purity of the bride. The wedding cake too was called the brideâ€™s cake, as the highlight was on the bride on the wedding day. However, in modern times, that concept has been consigned to history, as more and more couples opt for themes and more colourful cakes for their wedding day.

Old Traditions Slowly Changing In Modern Weddings

One of the most important visual parts of a wedding, besides the bride and groom, are the wedding cakes in London as well as the rest of the world. Despite having a varied cultural mix, modern patisseries can come up with astonishing wedding cakes that can depict and enshrine your culture along with family traditions. They provide professional service, starting with the first consultation, discussing any themes that the couple might wish to incorporate in the cake design, and safe delivery and setting up of the cake. They will be constantly in touch with you during the cake making process, and will make sure that the end product is something that the couple will be proud to share with the rest of their family and friends.

Birthdays Too Need Special Occasion Cakes

Another service provided by these specialist bakers are birthday cakes in London as well as the rest of the United Kingdom. They can provide beautiful bespoke birthday cakes that are delicious to look and eat or they could make them to a certain theme for the birthday party. Whatever the rationale, these cakes are so beautifully made and with such attention to detail, that it may sometimes seem a shame to cut it and share it with family and friends.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/food-articles/ancient-rituals-of-wedding-cakes-still-going-strong.htm - Article Side

Duane Hope - About Author:
Jone Harish is an expert author for writing articles and currently working for chicuniquecakes.co.uk in London and already written so many articles on a Cupcakes London, a Christening Cakes London, a Cake Makers London

Article Keywords:
Cupcakes London,Christening Cakes London,Cake Makers London

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!