Bulk Foods Top Reasons to Buy Food in Bulk by Robert Henson

Article published on July 19th 2012 | Food

If you have a large family to feed, then you know that buying bulk foods is the only way to go. Most stores don't sell food in bulk, which is very expensive when you are buying a lot of the same thing. Almost every kind of food you find at the supermarket can be bought in bulk; however some items cannot be purchased large quantities so it's best to hunt around for the best prices. Most foods sold in this manner, like bulk candy, are non-perishable items, like food found in jars, cans, and packages. It would be impractical to sell perishable food in bulk in almost all situations.

Buying in bulk will save you money because the manufacturer still turns a profit and wants you to buy more to keep your business. Manufacturers will lower the price of each unit to encourage this kind of buying. Bulk foods will give you a large discount, which is great for the large family and businesses that are trying to save on expenses. A bulk discount is only good up to a certain amount, so make sure you learn about any price caps that the manufacturer has ahead of time. You should make sure that everything you buy after the cap will be used and not wasted due to spoilage.

Buying in bulk will save you from having to make wasted trips back and forth from the supermarket. It saves on time, gas, and money, all of which make sense for businesses and large families that are on a budget. However, the elderly rarely buy bulk foods, because going to the supermarket is their time for socializing, exercise, and just plain getting out of the house! Just about the only thing the elderly buy in bulk is bulk candy for children and themselves.

Imagine a convenience store that buys it's product in singular installments. Having to pay shipping on each one, ordering each individual product over and over again. You can see right now that this wouldn't work as a business model. That is why businesses buy bulk foods so that they can pass their savings on to their customers and of course to save time. This way, a business can turn a profit because it saves on the cost of food. Now take that philosophy to heart with your family; it just makes sense to run your family as you would a small business!
