Article Side

How to Create a Terrarium and Flower Garden for Your Home by Jamie Keifer

Article published on June 6th 2012 | Gardening

Plants contribute to the overall appeal of a house. Flowering plants bring a splash of color to any dull space which can attract butterflies and beautify a garden. Miniature plants fit for terrariums make an interesting conversational piece when placed indoors.

Plants are more than just decorative items in the garden and the house. They relax the mind and ease tiredness because of the calming property of their green color. Indoor plants also serve as natural air purifiers. They reduce indoor air pollution caused by volatile organic compounds (VOC), carbon dioxide, and airborne microbes.

Outdoors spaces that provide shade are a perfect spot during the summer season. Instead of the usual green foliages planted in these spaces, flowering and crawling plants can make them more inviting. Flowering plants can spruce up an otherwise all-green area and provide a relaxing hideaway in summer.

The shaded part of the garden covered by trees or high walls usually has a trail of green plants around it. To put color to this part, add flowering plants like begonias and fuchsia. Colorful flowering plants help balance the sunâ€™s temperature to make it cooler. Mix hydrangeas, summersweet, kerria, alpine currant, evergreen azalea, and honeysuckle to create a spring ensemble. Aside from these, you can also have a combination of bigleaf hydrangea, impatiens, hydrangea, forest grass, fuchsia, and calibrachoa to provide a lively shaded space in the garden.

Walking through a garden filled with color and fluttering butterflies is an enchanting experience everyone dreams of. To have a garden of flowers that attract butterflies, mix colorful, fragrant and nectar-filled flowers together. You can plant perennial flowers like lavender, sage, coneflower, goldenrod, bee balm, violet, and sedge. These plants will naturally attract butterflies and make them stay in your garden.

Plant enthusiasts are not limited to outdoor gardening. You can also opt for terrariums which are excellent indoor plants, usually in a glass container that can serve as dÃ©cor or accent piece. Terrariums are enclosed miniature gardens that can have themes like a mini desert or small forest. These miniature gardens are low-maintenance and can be easily moved in any part of the house.

Plants are definitely more than just a source of oxygen for man. Plants and flowers for shade gardens that attract butterflies provide a soothing view and take us to another level of nature appreciation. You may read more about terrariums and butterfly gardens at containergardening.about.com and ca.uky.edu.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/gardening-articles/how-to-create-a-terrarium-and-flower-garden-for-your-home.htm - Article Side

Jamie Keifer - About Author:
For more details, search a flowers that attract butterflies, a terrariums, and a flowers for shade gardens in Google for related information.

Article Keywords:
flowers for shade gardens, flowers that attract butterflies, terrariums

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!