Things to Consider when Getting a Pool by David Methew

Article published on December 7th 2011 | Gardening

Nothing can cool you down on a hot summer day like a nice, refreshing swim. For that reason and many others, a pool is a great addition to any backyard. Before you get one, however, there are several factors you will need to take into consideration.

Type

First, you will need to consider what type of pool you would like to get. There are a variety of pool types; each offering its own set of advantages and disadvantages. Above ground pools are easy to install and generally cost less, while in ground pools are durable and offer design flexibility. Vinyl-lined pools are not as hard-wearing as concrete pools, but they are cost-effective and very easy to maintain. If you are thinking of putting a pool in your backyard, it is crucial that you explore all of your options. By educating yourself about the pros and cons of each pool type, you will be able to make the best choice for your budget and your lifestyle.

Design

Consider the style of your backyard. Is it modern? Traditional? Exotic? Your poolâ€™s design should be consistent with the rest of your yard. For example, if your backyard is modern, you may want to opt for a shape with sleek lines and state-of-the-art features. Remember that the shape of your pool could change the appearance of your entire backyard, so make sure you have a clear vision of what you would like your property to look like before settling on a design.

Additional Features

When you are installing a pool, you should consider any other features you might like to add to your backyard. Features like fountains and hot tubs look great alongside pools, while more subtle elements like patio stones can help complete the look of your yard.
