Using Party Tents by Cooper

Article published on February 16th 2012 | Gardening

Party tents are exactly as they sound â€“ instant shelters that you can erect in order to host parties and events outdoors under cover. These have many advantages over partying indoors, and as a relatively cheap investment particularly when split between several people they offer a great way to ensure a great time and one to remember.

So why party tents? Well if you've ever had a party in your own home then you will know what a nightmare that can be. This means having people trample on your carpets and spill drinks, it means having people knock things over â€“ and all of that is as embarrassing for them as it is upsetting for you. House parties while often great fun are unfortunately a great stress and a lot of work.

Conversely you may have had parties in venues that you've hired out and you will usually find that these are very expensive for what you get â€“ and in some cases this also includes a 'minimum tab' on the bar ensuring you all come away rinsed and with your shoes sticky.

At any rate parties indoors are often somewhat restricting in terms of how much space there is and they can often be hot and overly dark. There's a saying that most parties end up in the kitchen â€“ but while this has some truth it's fair to say that a good proportion of the others end up outdoors where there's more fresh air, better views and certainly more space. This way people can feel free to move around, can feel cool and less stuffy and you don't need to worry about them dropping their glasses.

This is what party tents can offer guests â€“ with a nicely ventilated space that opens naturally in the garden or another open area, and with the view of the stars right ahead. At the same time though by using party tents you also have many advantages over having a party based entirely outdoors. For one it means that should it start raining you aren't all going to get soaked and in fact it will probably be quite nice to huddle under the tent in the rain. At the same time party tents give you shelter from insects and during the day shelter from too much sun. They also ensure that your guests don't feel as though they're being 'kicked out' and prevent them from walking around in muddy puddles or stepping in anything unpleasant.

Party tents are also easy to decorate and this gives you an empty space you can work with to create precisely the mood and ambiance you are going for. There will have plenty of space to dance should you want it, but at the same time you will also be able to use as many tables and chairs as you like meaning this is appropriate even for dinner parties. There are many things you can do with party tents and their versatility means that you can also recycle them for future events â€“ meaning you're sure to become someone who is known for throwing a good party.
