Compatible Printer Cartridges are Rolling Back the Prices of Expensive Originals by Richard Donna

Article published on January 10th 2012 | Hardware

People who use printer for day-to-day printing job or use it for professional printing, the cost of printer cartridges is a real catastrophe because of its high cost, and this even reaches to the next level if you own a laser printer and requires toner cartridges, however, inkjet printers also prove to be costly.

This is because the printer manufactures like HP, Epson, Canon, Brother, Lexmark and others know that printer cartridges are consumable parts and when they run out, consumers will probably go back to them for new cartridges. Indeed, many people do not even know there are alternatives to brand products.

Original ink cartridges bought directly from the manufacturers are expensive due to the fact that the companies monopolize the printer ink business in the knowledge that most people donâ€™t bother to look elsewhere. However, you can save enough money by looking online for retailers offering discount office supplies or even, more specifically, discount printer supplies provider.

The office supplies companies may offer reduced prices as they purchase in bulk, supply in great volume and the same goes for the retail stores providing printer cartridges as well. However, this is not in the case of Original Equipment Manufacturer (OEM) products, as they commonly concentrates on the printer, not the ink supplies so donâ€™t generally keep an assortment for the business or consumers, instead give their total supply to the office supply companies.

However, there are affordable alternatives to brand name cartridges. Over the few years, a gamut of companies has come up that manufacture and supply compatible printer cartridges. These are the cartridges that work with your device but are not made by the original manufacture.

People often say that these compatible consumables provide lower quality printing and could cancel the warranty on your printers resulting in causing serious damage to your device. But it is not the case; independent test have established that these units are good, as if not better, than the OEM ones and even printer manufacturers sign a statement that warranties will not be voided by the use of alternative consumables.

The bottom line is- you want saving. You need to shop around, both on the physical store and online until you find the reasonable rate for the biggest saving. Since investment on cartridges has to be made once every few months at most, it is recommended spending time on searching out the cheapest price you can, whether that is online or on other stores.
