Have you wondered how the color gets applied to the paper? Well, this is where printer heads come into the picture. When a person buys a printer. it is essential he knows what he is getting and how the machine actually functions. This is a great way to repair the machines on your own as well.

What are print heads?

The print head applies colorant to the paper. The application of the color and how it is done depends on what type of printer you have. If you have a laser one, laser tends to attract the toner to the paper and this forms images, characters and fonts. If you have the old fashioned dot matrix, then it is a little different. There are pins inside which pushes the ink out and help in imprinting characters, images and fonts.  Inkjet printer is some whet similar to laser ones they practically spray the colorant o the paper to form images. Whether inkjet, dot matrix or laser, all of the have print heads which ensures smooth pushing off of the colorant and hence maintaining this small part of the big machine is crucial. Sometimes they get clogged. In such a scenario, printers can conk off or the print quality is very bad!
