Advanced Botox Treatment by Mike Merchant

Article published on June 25th 2012 | Health

Botox is actually an FDA approved medication therapy that usually works by relaxing various muscles of the face that causes wrinkles on aged people. Thanks to the invention of various technologies in the past 2-3 decades, these types of beauty treatments have been used by women all over the world. Fashion conscious men and women, people from the glamour world are in constant need of these skin care therapies. Botox is quite frequently used for reducing the fine lines on forehead; especially those dark circles around the eyes and also around the mouth. Even though it is not a permanent solution for getting rid of wrinkle problems, Botox generally lasts forÂ 3-4 months and it can produce quick results.

History

The use of various natural skin therapies is not new to the world but the use of Botox came in into the limelight mainly in the last century. This process has been recommended by the skin specialists for around 30 years and people have accepted it with pleasure. Mostly aged women having wrinkles and those having eye spasms or excessive muscle contractions have opted for this therapy over the years. Many people say that the latest use of Botox in order to decrease wrinkles was actually invented by an accident in the year 1986. It happened when a Vancouver dermatologist started using Botox when his wife suggested him that botulinum toxin could improve the wrinkles between the eyebrows besides treating the people having signs of eye spasms.

Mechanism of Botox therapy

Many of you may be aware that the botulinum toxin is a kind of natural substance that is secreted by various botulism causing bacteria. Botox actually works by jamming the release of acetylcholine towards the junction of the affected nerves and muscles. This is also the chemical which signals the muscles to contract. Now, blocking this particular signal causes momentary relaxation of those targeted muscles. As a consequence, the treated muscles end up in a more relaxed state for a certain period.

Cosmetic use of the Botox

Apart from eyebrows and various facial muscles, this particular therapy has also been enormously helpful in curing wrinkles in several other parts of human body. The research wok is still going on and we can surely hope that in upcoming time, this therapy would only get more popular.
