Advantages of Spaying or Neutering Your Pet by Dr. Mark Wilson

Article published on March 12th 2012 | Health

Spaying or neutering of pets and especially of dogs and cats can seem cruel, however, it is necessary to control them as well as restrict deadly diseases to develop. If your dog or bitch is not spayed or neutered, then it sometimes become difficult to control their activities, behavior, reactions and other daily life activities. It can also result in serious consequences for your as well as other pets. This is the reason spaying or neutering is considered as a curative practice rather than cruel.

The process is also responsible for restricting the over growing population of pets in the area. This is why it is often opted by the pet lovers and owners. The process is becoming widespread all over in order restrict the growth of mortal infection and the risk of other diseases like cancer, etc. Neutering male dogs simply means to control their extra outgoing activities, extraordinary violent and aggressive behavior. They also tend to roam less outside, mark territory less, and also show less dominance with humans and other animals. In fact, they feel no difference before and after the surgery and feels much healthier without any trouble. On the other hand, female dogs who have been spayed suffer less from heat cycles that can lead to dramatic personality changes. Dogs and bitches do not gain weight through the process of sterilization and can lead normal life after the operation.

Most of the leading pet care clinics and veterinary hospitals provide this procedure along with pre-surgical exams, anaesthetization in order offer complete care to the pets. You should also consider this surgery for your loving pets and help them grow in a better way. Through this technique you are actually offering it the opportunity to live a much longer, healthier life which is completely risk free.

Moreover, you can help in reducing overpopulation of unwanted companion animals. A sterile pet will not contribute to roaming, homeless pets, meaning there will be fewer animals in shelters and less need for the destruction of companion animals. However, most of the pet owners do not want to sterilize their pets because they find it cruel to them. It is a sole discretion of the pet owners and pet lovers and after understanding the basic reason they can take decision. Most of the reputable animal care clinic offer complete knowledge and guidelines about sterilization and its impacts on the pet after examining their health.
