

Article published on June 26th 2012 | Health

A number of dental conditions such as tooth decay, root canals and cavities demand the use of crowns and veneers as a treatment modality. In addition to this a lot of cosmetic dentists also opt to use these tools for the benefit of aesthetic enhancement and improvement of one's smile.

Depending on the procedures that are being performed, your dentist will decide whether or not you need to use crowns or veneers for the success of your treatment.

What are Crowns?

Quintessentially, crowns are dental tools which cover your entire tooth. The original tooth is cut away in such a way that only the core remains. The crown for your teeth is especially designed to cover the core as well as blend the treated tooth with the teeth around it.

This technique is most frequently used in situations where the tooth is completely decayed from the inside out or when one needs to perform a root canal. It is also commonly employed to enhance the appearance of the teeth that are out of line or have decay on the superficial surface.

This treatment can typically last a patient for about 10 to 15 years depending on how one maintains it. In the future, you are expected to replace it.

What are Veneers?

Veneers are commonly used for a number of planned or elective dentistry procedures but can also be used in a number of medical procedures that are necessary for the health of one's teeth. This technique is also used for covering a tooth which has a large portion or surface that is decayed or impacted by an unwanted cavity.

Veneers are typically made from porcelain or ceramic and are often also made out of titanium and gold for patients who are more fashion conscious. Not only are they very strong for but are known to efficiently cap the surface of your tooth for years to come without really needing any major maintenance or replacement.

Factors to Consider Before Picking a Crown or a Veneer

1. The first thing to take into consideration before picking one of the two procedures, is how long the chosen treatment will last you, and whether or not it is solve the medical or aesthetic condition that you wish to cure.
2. In addition to this, assess the cost of each treatment and make sure it is well within your budget.
3. If the case at hand is medical and not aesthetic, it is likely that a large portion of the treatment will be covered by your insurance company, though it may have a cap on how much they are willing to pay within one calendar year.
4. Typically, crowns can be a couple of hundred dollars more expensive.

Talk to your dental expert who will be able to help you make the correct decisions.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/health-articles/dental-veneers-versus-crowns.htm> - Article Side

Stella Richard - About Author:

Our expert advised you about the rise of oral problems, dental health, a Vancouver Veneers and how can they deal with them with ease to one's self.

Article Keywords:

Vancouver Veneers, Skin Care Vancouver, Vancouver Dentist, Yaletown Dentistry

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!