When it comes to DNA testing, we are all a little curious about how things work, and how testers come across these accurate results so quickly. DNA testing is the most accurate way of finding out who is who in the world, and who relates to who in blood and who does not. You often see on day time TV programmes people asking for DNA tests, to prove who is the father of a child, as it is the most reliable source of evidence one can gather. There are many conspiracies about what happens to DNA once tested, and to clear this up now, DNA test specimens are always thrown out immediately after being used, unless requested by a client to keep them on hold, in which case a DNA testing company will keep the DNA for up to six months.

If you are thinking of getting a DNA test, you should always go with a company that you feel comfortable with, as you are giving them your DNA. There are hundreds of trusted well reputable DNA testing companies out there, and they offer various ways of gathering your DNA to suit your needs. Some companies will send you a home DNA kit, which will allow you to supply them the DNA from your home, and send it back for analysis. The only problem with home DNA testing is that obviously people can supply any DNA and fiddle with the evidence. But, there would be no use in that, as you would be wasting your money, and time. Many people use this method to settle family disputes, or clear things up which they need answers to. Also, this way of testing allows families to get quick, inexpensive answers, without having to involve a court, or a legal assistant.

The most common way for people to be tested, is to enter a legitimate DNA testing lab or area which will supply clients with everything they need to perform the test. At these centres, there is a difference and that is that all the legal standards have to be met. Legally-binding tests require a witness, proof of identity, and special chain of custody procedures.

One DNA and Paternity testing company which has a highly respectable reputation is GTLDNA (The Genetic Testing Laboratory Inc.).
